A MONG the provincial Curling Societies of Scotland a prominent place is due to the Sanquhar Club, which has been in existence for upwards of a century. The history of the proceedings of this Society, compiled from the records by the Secretary, Mr James Brown, and published on the occasion of its centenary, 21st January 1874, is a most interesting little volume, and indeed a model work for succinctness, good taste, and good feeling. Mr Brown gives the first minute as follows: -- On Friday, the 21st day of January 1774, near sixty curlers met upon Sanquhar Loch and had an agreeable game at curling. In the evening they dined together in the Duke of Queensberry's Arms at Sanquhar. After dinner, it was proposed that they should form themselves into a Society, under the name of the Sanquhar Society of Curlers, and that a Master should be chosen annually, which proposal was agreed to, and several other regulations respecting the constitution and order of the Society were made. Accordingly, one of the oldest curlers being chosen Preses, appointed a Committee of the best qualified to examine all the rest concerning the curler Word and Grip. Those who pretended to have these and were found defective, were subjected to a fine, and those who made no pretensions were instructed. Then Mr Alexander Bradfute in South Mains was chosen Master for the present year. The terms and prices of admission into...
